

Abstract

A method for supplying a power to a liquid crystal display including the steps of reducing a power source voltage from a system and supplying the reduced power source voltage to digital circuit devices for processing digital signal.